I have read the paper by Mayer and Majumdar and I like it very much. If you want to have it published quickly, I am fine with an acceptance without any revisions. Otherwise, some minor revisions might be useful. The authors can try to move a lot of the derivations and detailed math to the appendix and that will make the paper more reader friendly. In addition, if the authors could comment on what would happen to the equilibrium if the number of firms that lobby matters, that would also be quite useful. In other words, if the same total lobbying is doing by a greater number of firms that might make lobbying more effective. Also, authors look at the extreme cases where employment cannot be adjusted at all and where it is freely adjustable. Can all this be done in one framework with costly adjustment? Those are all the comments I have. Once again, let me reiterate that I like the paper very much and I think it makes a significant contribution to the literature on the political economy of trade policy.
